ON THE TOWN

055 MILWAUKEE

With a world-class art museum; an unparalleled dedication to sustainable goods; a growing culinary scene; and a dedication to Harley-Davidson, there's much more to Brew City than beer—although a local brewery tour is still a must.

Just across the Milwaukee River from the museum, you'll find the country's first boutique motorcycle hotel. The Iron Horse Hotel (www.theironhorsehotel.com; 888-543-4766) offers everything from covered motorcycle parking to details like custom hooks to hang heavy leathers, and benches for removing and storing boots and helmets.

“This is really a great accent, a continuation of the Harley experience,” says owner Tim Dixon, who rides a Harley Road King custom bike. “We wanted to capture that industrial legacy, yet honor that refinement of luxury. The luxury of a Harley is defined by the rumble, the comfort, the design.”

The Iron Horse, like a Harley bike, is simultaneously rugged yet refined, upscale yet earthy, and its spaces encourage riders and non-riders to mingle. Lunch hour at its bar, Branded, has been known to bring together ladies from the Red Hat Society and visiting riders decked out in heavy leathers. “They were just like my mother's friends who do their lunching,” Dixon says.
